

Theory of Constraints Critical Chain Management Lean Logical Thinking Process

Are you interested in the Theory of Constraints and all its applications? Discover all the proposed training courses by Marris Consulting on different topics around the Theory of Constraints.

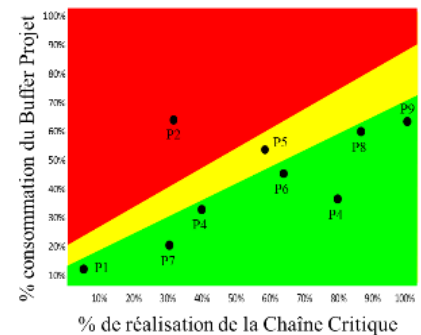

Theory of Constraints in Production:

Decrease your manufacturing cycle, generate growth and accelerate your lean measures by applying the Theory of Constraints (TOC) / Constraints Management to your operations. Lean and TOC are not incompatible, it is actually quite the opposite. Learn to include some of the TOC components in your Lean approach.

Critical Chain Project Management :

Your projects suffer from substantial overdues and budget overruns? Are you often forced to adjust the original specifications of your projects downwards? Critical Chain, stem from the Theory of Constrains, is capable of achieving spectacular results and more and more companies tend to adopt this methodology to manage their projects.

Theory of Constraints Critical Chain Management Lean Logical Thinking Process

Lean

In the industrial field, everyone has already given Lean a go, but in most cases operational and financial results revealed to be disappointing. This training aims at giving to industrial managers who are disappointed with Lean some insights of key factors of “Good Lean” and at explaining how to avoid the pitfalls of “Bad Lean”. Lean is not just a trend: if an organisation becomes Leaner it will boost its performance.

Logical Thinking Process :

As the complexity is relentlessly growing in the business world, deciders are continuously seeking for answers to these two fundamental questions: What should we do and how could we do it? All problems encountered by leaders in any organisation can be summarised by these two questions. Amongst these two, the “What?” question is the most critical one. It is the leaders’ responsibility to define the “What?”, more specifically what needs to be done and therefore to show the right direction to follow. Subordinates are then in charge of answering “how” the company can achieve its goal.

We are an officially recognized French training organization (Datadock) and our training sessions can be covered by your joint social institutions.
